

DRY SOCIETY FORMED HERE

Elmer E. Weimer Named President of County Flying Squadron at Meeting.

Elmer E. Weimer was elected chairman of the Marion County Flying Squadron society at a mass meeting last night at Central Junior High school at which Oliver W. Stewart, president of the Flying Squadron foundation at Indianapolis, Ind., spoke. Oscar Cross was named treasurer.

The issue of prohibition is national, not local, county or statewide, Mr. Stewart declared. He endeavored to show by using the arguments of those not in favor of prohibition, that there is less drinking and less drunkenness today than in the days of the legalized saloon.

"Prohibition at its worst is better than the saloon at its best," he said. He urged the election of dry candidates, regardless of politics. In closing he outlined the plan of the campaign of the flying squadron. The squadron is enrolling voters over the county to support the Eighteenth amendment, and is organizing the communities into effective local units.

Tonight Mr. Stewart will speak in Sidney. Miss Norma C. Brown, who spoke here Wednesday, will speak in Bucyrus tonight.

LOCAL O. N. G. UNITS HOLD JOINT BANQUET

Meeting To Be Annual Post-Camp Affair; Columbus Officers Guests.

Marion Ohio National Guard units held their first annual post-camp party in the armory last night with 75 members of Co. D, 168th Infantry, First Battalion Headquarters Co., 168th Infantry, and guests present.

The party started with a banquet served from the armory kitchen, in charge of Mess-Sergeant Allen Christ of Co. D. This was followed by group singing led by First Lieutenant Walter E. Mathiot in charge of Headquarters Co., old time music by the Doolittle trio, and special music by Bert Gilmore and Joe Tanager. Clarence Hodge gave a song dance and Sergeant Major Ralph Marshall of Headquarters Co. danced.

One of the features of the program was the story hour in charge of Lieutenant Carl F. Ebert, postmaster. Members of both companies were called upon for brief stories about interesting incidents that occurred during the recent camp season at Camp Perry.

Among the guests were Major G. M. Ward, major of the First Battalion, of which Marion companies are a part, and Captain Ralph Wolf in charge of Co. B, both of Columbus.

Captain Hubert L. Taylor, head of Co. D, said that the post-camp party is to be made an annual affair, as will be the post-inspection parties.

WIENER ROAST IS PLANNED BY GROUP

DEMOCRATS APPEAL FOR CONTRIBUTIONS

By The Associated Press
NEW YORK, Aug. 26.—Democratic chieftains, seeking necessary funds for the national campaign chest, hope the mail mail will bring them a stream of small contributions as the result of an appeal by Gov. Franklin D. Roosevelt.

The Democratic presidential nominee, speaking to a nation-wide radio audience, asked for funds last night at Albany.

The financial committee has set $1,500,000 tentatively to be raised for the campaign, a sum much smaller than was spent on some political campaigns of the past.

DORSETT LEADS EAST WING OF AIR DERBY

Cincinnati Man Second; Oklahoma Pilot First in Western Contingent.

By The Associated Press
INDIANAPOLIS, Ind., Aug. 26.—Fred Dorsett of Augusta, Ga., led the eastern wing of the cross country air derby into the municipal airport here today. He arrived from East St. Louis shortly before 12 noon, and was followed a few seconds later by S. C. Huffman of Cincinnati, O.

Helen MacCloskey of Pittsburgh landed third and behind her was Chappy Lennox of New Haven, Conn., who leads the eastern division in point standing. Lennox's standing here was 1,032.03 points.

The air racers arrived here shortly after a rain and wind storm had swept over the airport. Cloudy weather was in prospect for the race over the Indianapolis-Cincinnati leg this afternoon.

Roy Hunt of Norman, Okla., is leading the western contingent in points scored, and Eldon Cessna of Wichita, Kan., is second.

'MAJOR CRISIS PAST,' PRESIDENT ASSERTS

Convenes Business Chiefs with Call for Renewed Attack on Depression.

the railroads and stimulation of industry through expansion of maintenance of equipment and purchase of new equipment in cooperation with the interstate commerce commission and the Reconstruction Finance corporation.

"3.—Increased employment through the sharing work movement.

"4.—The stimulation of the repair and improvement of home movement.

"5.—Assistance to home owners with maturing mortgages.

"6.—Active cooperation of all banking and industrial committees with the Reconstruction Finance Corporation in working out the problems incident to the making of self-liquidating loans for public and semi-public projects, and for slum clearance and housing projects, as provided in the emergency relief act; in the aiding of livestock loans by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation and agricultural credit corporations; in assisting the establishment of agricultural credit corporations provided for in the relief act and in facilitating the adequate functioning of the new home loan banks."

Others Voice Views

Then, one by one, the heads of the government agencies directly involved in the new economic drive for jobs and credit spoke to the meeting, including such financial and business leaders as Myron Taylor, of the United States Steel Corporation; Daniel Willard, of the railroad world; Edsel Ford, Detroit automobile manufacturer; and Melvin Traylor, Chicago banker.

Allee Pomerene told of the hopes and purposes of the gigantic Reconstruction Finance Corporation.

Franklin Fort, chairman of the new home loan banking board, explained this set-up and announced the decision of Comptroller of the Currency to order abandonment for 60 days of all foreclosures by national bank receivers.

"It is not proposed," the President had explained, "to engage in artificialities. Nor is it proposed that you attempt to settle here in a day great economic problems of the future. It is simply proposed that you organize for action in the problems immediately before us."

After the applause that followed his speech, the President took a seat on the platform while Robinson introduced Mills for the next speech.

FIREMEN QUENCH TWO GRASS FIRES

No Damage Results from Either of Minor Blazes.

Grass fires gave firemen from central station two runs yesterday afternoon. There was no damage at either fire. At 2:10 p. m. neighbors in the vicinity of Mandanna avenue became alarmed when they saw grass burning in a vacant field and called the fire department. Several firemen from the central station responded in the chief's car to find the fire being watched by two property owners who had started the blaze.

At 4:15 p. m. firemen received a call from North Greenwood street where sparks from a bonfire had set fire to the dry grass in a vacant lot. The blaze was put out by firemen from central station.

How to Plan Ahead for Sunday Menus

SUMMER with its ever-present lure to out-of-doors suggests to the housewife that she plan her menus so that she may be free to enjoy Sunday with her family without the necessity of preparing an elaborate meal.

In order to do this she will provide a hot and ample Saturday dinner made up of dishes that may be utilized in appetizing ways on Sunday. Thus if plans call for a picnic dinner in the woods or by the lake she will have arranged her dinner to that end, choosing a meat that may be used, sliced cold in sandwiches or reheated in casserole style. Perhaps the family will remain at home with guests for tea. In that case she will select dishes for Saturday night that may, with additions that involve little work, provide a delectable buffet supper or informal "high tea."

A SATURDAY MENU

Providing Left-Overs for Picnic Use

Tomato Juice Cocktail
Baked Ham
Fresh String Beans, Boiled Potatoes
Corn Relish
Bread and Butter
Strawberry Shortcake
Coffee

FOR THE SUNDAY PICNIC

The ham, spiced with cloves and crusted with brown sugar lends its melting goodness to delectable sandwiches on rye or white bread. Additional sandwiches may be made of roquefort cheese creamed in equal parts with Philadelphia cream cheese, a tablespoon of cream and one teaspoon of mayonnaise. This may be prepared the day before and left ready in the icebox. The spread is most delicious used on rye or whole wheat bread.

Potato salad made of the remaining boiled potatoes, left from Saturday night's dinner is especially tempting when a dash of celery seed and finely chopped onions are added to the conventional potato and mayonnaise combination. Sweet pickles, olives, sliced tomatoes, complete the main part of the picnic spread.

The strawberry shortcake used the night before was made with cupcakes. An ample supply should be baked so that enough for the picnic meal may be prepared with chocolate frosting. These with fresh fruit make the desert. Coffee, piping hot in thermos bottles or made fresh over a picnic fire complete the meal.

THE SAME MENU

Utilized for the Sunday Supper or Tea

Ham may be used in so many ways that the preparation of a delicious supper dish is greatly simplified. Two suggestions follow:

NOODLE RING WITH HAM
Early Sunday morning this dish may be made ready to pop into the oven an hour before serving. Since many families are in the habit of a late and rather more substantial breakfast than usual the main meal of the day may be postponed until five or six o'clock.

2 cups of ham, chopped fine.
1 cup canned mushrooms, chopped fine.
1 green pepper, sliced and boiled.
1 package of fine noodles.
1 egg.
1½ cups milk.

Boil noodles until tender, drain and add egg, well beaten with enough milk to cover the noodles slightly when placed in well buttered noodle ring. Put aside in the ice box until an hour before serving. Place in pan partly filled with water and bake in a slow oven for one hour. Remove from oven and place on platter. Fill cavity with ham, mushrooms and green pepper combined with a dash of salt. Bake the outside of the noodle ring and butter. Serve piping hot. This mixture may be reheated in the morning and served with the evening meal.

With this dish you can have a picnic or a party. It is a real party dish. It is a real party dish. It is a real party dish.

Women study their market before doing their food buying. In preparation for the week-end, they read the food advertising in The Star. They acquaint themselves with new items being offered, prevailing prices and specials, purchase of is particularly advantageous to the buyer.

Quality, too, comes in for full consideration by women buyers. By constant contact with the food stores patronized, they familiarize themselves with the value of brand names. Through advertising of nationally known products they recognize proper content and desired package sizes.

Evident in all study and planning is the influence of thrift. Women are keen traders. They insist on and get desired quality and fair prices.

In a word—by keeping up-to-the-minute in the studying their jobs—women do their jobs well and save money.

A New Attitude.

President Hoover, whose plain and understandable advocacy of state control of the liquor problem under guarantees won general respect for that part of his acceptance speech, goes a little further in a letter to Dr. Daniel A. Poling, militant dry leader, and again expresses himself with commendable directness.

In accepting the nomination Mr. Hoover proposed: "Each state shall be given the right to deal with prohibition as it may determine but subject to absolute guarantees in the Constitution of the United States to protect each state from interference and invasion by its neighbors, and that in no part of the United States shall there be a return of the saloon system with its inevitable political and social corruption and its organized interference with other states."

In his letter to Dr. Poling, head of the Allied Forces for Prohibition with organizations in every state, the President says:

"We are on common ground in a desire to rid this civilization of the evils of the liquor traffic. We may not agree on method but I have come to the belief that we must, through constructive and not destructive changes, revive the energies of the states to deal with the new evils, with federal constitutional guarantees against the return of the old evils."

In the campaign of 1928 Mr. Hoover said: "I do not favor repeal of the 18th amendment. I stand for the efficient enforcement of the laws enacted thereunder. Our country has undertaken a great social and economic experiment, noble in motive and far-reaching in purpose. It must be worked out constructively."

The changes which have come about in the President's attitude during these four years unquestionably reflect the changing attitude of many who were definitely against any change in the "noble experiment" four years ago.

The Allied Forces for Prohibition, of which Dr. Poling is the leader, is by long odds the most influential organization now supporting the 18th amendment. It has decided by overwhelming national vote to support Mr. Hoover's candidacy and in a letter to the executive Dr. Poling shows the broadening feeling, even among these militant crusaders against liquor. He says to the President:

"Without prejudice to the fundamental position on the principle involved and without any prejudice to the future program which may be adopted, we have met the challenge of the present crisis. We believe that the election in November will both advance our cause and confirm our battle strategy."

"We have said in every state in the Union that we are for the 18th amendment and for liberty with law. We also have said that we recognize a deep-seated, honest difference of opinion; that not all God's children are on our side; that we believe in majority rule and that because we are trying to be good citizens we are for prohibition."

In an interview Dr. Poling says of President Hoover:

"I would say that he is decisively a dry." The prohibition leader probably is correct in his analysis. The whole collection of statements serves to show the change of attitude which has come over many who sincerely oppose the sale of liquor. Carrie Nation with her hatchet, Billy Sunday with his picturesque "I'll hit the liquor traffic while I have a fist, I'll kick it while I have a foot, I'll butt it while I have a head, I'll bite it while I have a tooth and when I'm old and toothless I'll gum it until God calls me home to glory." And those good, God-fearing Ohio women who prayed outside saloon doors when the prohibition movement was an unwanted babe honest and uncompromising. The new trend of prohibition thought is just as honest but it reflects the compromising attitude which recognizes that in "holding gains already made" and continuing the fight by recognizing the right of others to a divergent opinion, more progress may be made toward the eventual goal of sobriety and law observance than by ax wielding and tongue lashing.

Incidentally, this attitude of the times gives President Hoover the support of an organization which is worth serious reckoning in computing the probabilities of the campaign.

Steel Leads Way.

The United States Steel Corporation, largest manufacturing organization in the world, gave impetus to the continuing stock market rise by maintaining its dividend and now it sounds one of the most hopeful notes in the symphony of improving conditions by announcement that $5,000,000 will be spent in plant improvements anticipating revival of industry.

The chairman of the company's directorate speaks of a "vacuum of unfilled orders" similar to that which followed the World war. Most merchants can give testimony that this vacuum is a probability. Inventories are low and when buying gets under way it probably will come with such a rush that only those companies which are anticipating it, like the U. S. Steel Corporation, will be in a position to cash in on its possibilities.

Expenditure of $5,000,000 means creation of many jobs. There are insignificant compared with the

A New Industrial Enterprise.

Prospect of adding to its industrial resources is always the brightest and most cheering sort of outlook for a community.

Sometimes an infant enterprise is launched with elaborate announcements and forecasts and in other instances the proceedings are on a quiet, modest scale. That has been the case with Joy Bros. Inc., a company which has undertaken manufacture of a new type of machinery for use in coal mining. There has been comparatively little mention in public print about the purposes and plans of the organization and that circumstance may be regarded as promising. Records of successful industrial enterprises show that there has been no hint of trumpets at the outset.

Should the new sawing device, an invention of one of the officials and organizers of the company, meet with favor in the mining industry, it is safe to say that the future promises much for the enterprise. The principle upon which the machine is designed and made is sound and practical and seems to present advantages over the long established methods in coal mining. Waste and danger resulting from the blasting of coal are eliminated and other features are also said to recommend the system as one of superior merits.

With all of those circumstances considered, the enterprise is one that is of exceptional interest to this community, where headquarters of the company have been established. The machines are now in process of production at a plant in Mt. Gilead and it is understood that the initial test period is past. The new device has been placed in practical use and has proved its merits.

Citizens of Marion, interested in every project that is likely to contribute to future community development and progress, will watch hopefully for news of continued advancement and expansion for Joy Bros. Inc.

Notes on the News.

Captain James A. Mollison, at the time this was written the last aviator to cross the Atlantic, was amazed and thrilled when traffic policemen, escorting him to the flying field, ignored red lights and held up traffic to let him pass. "There couldn't be anything like that in England," exclaimed the trans-Atlantic commuter. "Even the king has to obey traffic rules there." That, dear captain, is what's wrong with America, in the opinion of many of her loyal citizens. It's all right in your case but there is entirely too much of this business of stopping the law to let somebody go by. In many cases laws, like traffic lights, perform their function but when they stop somebody who wants to get some place were inclined to say "Go Ahead."

Mussolini, at the war maneuvers, shouldered a pack and marched with the infantrymen. If more of the men who have the issues of war and peace in their hands were made to shoulder packs and march with the soldiers not only in parades but also into the trenches there would be less jangling of armor and blowing of trumpets.

Zeppo Marx, the handsome one of the four funny brothers, has been tobed of $37,000. That's a real contribution by fate toward his ail. Zeppo must look serious while his brothers clown. Now all he has to do to keep in character is think of his missing jewelry.

Three Polish actors who are earning a living by floating around in a wash tub are not showing us anything new. The wife of many a street corner statesman has been earning her living in the same apparatus for these many years.

Al Smith, taking over a new job as editor of a national magazine, says it will discuss all questions "preparing for solution." The first one can come right out of the old brown derby. One of the pressing questions we can think of is what Al Smith is going to do about the man who licked him at Chicago.

The 17 boys ousted from the Annapolis entrance exams for giving identical answers to the questions were just starting too early to demonstrate that good old clocklike teamwork that puts such a thrill in the middy parade.

Vallee the Valiant.

The idea that Rudy Vallee was merely a curly haired boy with a soft voice and dreamy eyes who sang sentimental songs through a miniature megaphone nearly ruined his career. To be honest about it, many people had gathered the impression that the crooner was pretty much of a big sissy.

The turning point seems to have come about the time that he was smacked with a grapefruit in answer to his "Give Me Something to Remember You By." He accepted the situation so gracefully that he won the sympathy of the audience and the admiration of many others who read of the incident along with the news of the day.

He made more friends last year when he went on tour with a revue and accepted a nightly kidding from the comedians of the company with all the fellowship of a true good sport.

A couple of nights ago in Wilkesbarre, Pa., a gang of youths who did not approve the way he combed his hair and crooned love songs started to heckle him in a dance hall where he was playing. Thereupon Mr. Vallee put aside his baton and megaphone, rolled the sleeves back from his well-mannered hands and went down into the crowd to settle with his disturbers.

Police ousted the hecklers before fistfuffs were exchanged but any saxophone player with nerve enough to tackle a gang of amusement park disturbers earns the right to wear curls in his hair and croon ballads of passion. He may even wear spats without being any the less a man. We believe that Rudy Vallee has succeeded quite well in overcoming the handicap of too much savoir faire which marred the earlier days of his career.

Gout? Then Fight Shy of Purines.

Gout is a disease frequently confused with rheumatism and arthritis. Gout is not caused by an infection, as they are, but is probably due to inability of the body to rid itself of uric acid. Although the disease has been known to mankind for many years, it must be confessed that its exact cause has not yet been definitely determined.

Uric acid is a substance normally found in the blood-stream and urine. In gout the blood contains an excessive amount of uric acid, while there is an abnormally low percentage in the urine. The salts of uric acid are deposited in the tissues around the joints. This causes swelling of the joints, inflammation and great pain. Cartoons and "funny strips" in the newspapers frequently picture a person suffering from gout, with the foot elevated on a chair and the big toe wrapped in bandages. The "funnies" give us an accurate picture of a sufferer from gout.

Men more than women are afflicted with gout, and it occurs most frequently between the ages of 30 and 40. Heredity, overeating, drinking of red wines and beer, lack of fresh air and exercise—these are a few of the accepted causes of this disease, and some cases have been associated with lead poisoning.

During an acute attack of gout, complete rest in bed is imperative. The foot or inflamed joint should be kept quiet, elevated and warm. The diet should be limited to milk, toast, cereals (except oatmeal), potatoes and fruits. Coffee, tea, alcohol and all meats should be omitted from the diet and water should be taken freely. Proper intestinal elimination is imperative.

Chronic sufferers from gout should avoid foods which are rich in "purines." These are chemical compounds, found in certain foods, that produce an excessive amount of uric acid. That is why all sufferers from gout should avoid sweetbreads, liver and kidney. Attacks of gout often following the eating of these foods, which contain unpleasant quantities of purines.

Avoid meat broths, gravies, fish, poultry and game. Oatmeal, asparagus, mushrooms, spinach and cauliflower should be eaten sparingly. The diet should consist of eggs, milk, cheese, cereals, sugar, fats, fruits and most vegetables.

Every case of gout should be under the supervision of a physician. In many instances electricity, light and heat strapping the inflamed joint with adhesive and other measures, when properly employed, aid in the relief of pain and hasten recovery. The diet is the most important part of the treatment of gout. Please remember that, in order to be effective, the diet must be closely followed over a long period of time. Do not expect an immediate cure.

She has changed in appearance since the days she sat as a member of the war congress. Her hair has grown a bit gray and her face bears evidence of the lapse of years.

But those who know her say that she has lost none of the enthusiasm she had then. Jeanette Rankin from Missoula, Mont., has the same ideals, thoughts and enthusiasm as Representative Rankin had back in the days of '17.

Highlights of Ohio History

BY J. H. GALBRAITH

WORTHINGTON COLLEGE.

The history of Worthington, the little suburb to the north of Columbus, is replete with the establishing of schools in various lines, many of them with queer turns in their programs, and all—unfortunately for the little town—doomed to early failure.

One of these was the Physio-Medical College of Ohio, headed by Dr. Alva Curtis in 1838. He remained in Ohio until 1881.

The Worthington institution was known popularly as the Botanic Medical college. Dr. Curtis had the courage of his convictions and did not hesitate to debate his theories.

The care of the stomach by reflection of proper foods, and thorough elimination of bodily wastes were stressed in the system Curtis taught; its materia medica was of narrow range and sparingly used. It caught its share of public approval—perhaps a little more than that, and looked back upon now, is said to have opened the way out of the rather violent allopathy of the day.

When Dr. Curtis died, the system entered its final stage. The last of the school disappeared by the mercer method in Chicago in 1910.

Daily Talk to Parents

BY ALICE JUDSON PEALE

A NEUROTIC GIRL.

An 18-year-old girl became ill after every meal. Her appetite and digestion which had never been good had become increasingly worse with the onset of adolescence. Medical examination showed no physical causes for the difficulty.

The girl was the old child of a widowed mother who adored her with passionate possessiveness; hovered over her meals and controlled every detail of her existence. The girl in turn was devoted to her mother. The nerve specialist's advice to send her to a sanatorium for a rest was regarded by them both as a hardship since it involved a separation of some weeks.

The girl returned, having gained in weight and apparently quite cured of her trouble. Hardly had she been home for a few days when the illness began again.

At this time the mother was called away to another city on urgent business matters and the girl was left alone. Within a week her trouble disappeared, to return only once more her mother returned home.

That the girl's condition was somehow linked to her emotional relationship to her mother is clear, and that the simplest way of meeting the situation was to separate them is also evident. Often the most casual observation reveals such definite connection between a child's nervous symptom and his family situation.

Where the physical disturbance is sufficiently grave the need of a separation, sometimes for a long time, is indicated. In the case of adolescents this is often the best solution, for at this age such problems have become so complicated that only long and thorough psychological treatment can help.

Work Day by Day

26—Thoughts is overworked. Like the bosomy adjective "gorgeous." Much blame deservedly lies with the radio announcer. He is unable to introduce an ordinary person—somebody, say, from a basement, heavily-odored of boiled mutton and cabbage. Each person is extraordinarily famous. I earnestly believe there are not more than 30 truly famous people in the world. Lindbergh is one. This is a swell way, incidentally, to head smack into a storm.

A peaceful sweep of lower Park avenue has become a haven for clubs. The magnificent Union League Club is there, with an entrance on 33rd street. The Princeton is at Park and 39th. The Woman's City Club, with a membership of professional ladies, is at 35th. In the same square, is the Advertising Club. The Dartmouth is on 38th. The Amherst (Coolidge's alma mater), at Lexington avenue and 37th. And the only time sailors appear as innocent as they look in the "Join the Navy" posters, is when they have a pick tea dancing party with the debbies at their club at 40th and Park.

A waltz in Hollywood squares better than a buck to impart this: "Hollywood has taken so many socks lately, nothing perturbs it. Its indifference is colossal. It is getting so nobody minds the Marx Brothers being at a party anymore."

My recent paragraph juggle with the word "focillation"—a picking at the bed clothes—has stirred the carphologists. They say, the nervous state of the world lately is that of carphology. "It is derived from two Greek words (The good old Greeks would have a word for it) meaning "chaff" and "to collect." There you are: collecting chaff!

I could have made carphology hum the other evening, had I a good woolen blanket handy. A snooty little group at the Plaza—a cathedral off movie artifice, off Park avenue—was trying to impress everybody around, who had no interest whatever, that a young actor in the talkie, whose role cast him as a Harvard man, wasn't at all. What impressed me was that all, what impressed me was that the pseudo-Harvardite of the screen was making a living. I know quite a number of college men who can't. I'm still pretty hot, too—Copyright, 1932, McNaught Syndicate, Inc.

Marry-Go-Round

DELETED. Intelligent, bumpy. Men, more—and. The Slender of style as last dead as last sophisticated "deceased!" I. M. G., all of business, the performers, all this and make, all the few, and plas-ent har-kari, will cut their ides, that love sometimes gets lost—or temporarily mislaid—in the shuffle. "Oh yes! Love has to put up a pretty stiff fight to win out against so many rivals. But, in the end, Love usually gets his way with her. She always wakes up, sooner or later, to discover that success or fame or excitement or adventure doesn't amount to much, unless there is someone, on the other side of the table or the fireplace, to enjoy it with you, or share it with you. Without love, they are just dead sea fruit!

Or she discovers there are just as many thrills in a kitchenette or in a bungalow as there are in an airplane. Or that she can get more kick out of putting up cretans curtains than out of pulling down a swimming record.

That's what happens to her. And, if it happens too late, she finds herself wondering why life is so flavorless. Because, without love, nothing has much tang of kick or significance—not even success!

A woman just isn't "living" when she is not in love. She's merely marking time—going through the motions.

So, the beauty-parlors and silk mills and movie theaters will keep right on running. Because, love will never be obsolete!—Copyright, 1932, King Features Syndicate, Inc.

Poses of the Past

AGO.

It was Monday, Aug. 26, 1912. The C. & E. Shoe Co. of Columbus, which purchased and had been operating the Marion Shoe factory on Park boulevard since July 1, was reported doing a fine business and had doubled its force since it took charge. It was employing 50 workmen and hoped soon to have 400 employed.

It was announced that the Marion Ice and Cold Storage Co. had plans under way to build a new plant on the west side of Oak street that would more than double the capacity of the present plant.

At a meeting of Marion business men, held at the Marion club, arrangements were made for observing "Erie day" on Wednesday. Citizens' committees were to meet in the morning at the club house and from there start a city-wide campaign to obtain stock subscriptions to finance the purchase of homes in Galion of Erie employees who were being transferred to this city.

Mr. and Mrs. George Bain and Mr. and Mrs. Edward Binkley returned from a 10-day fishing trip to Lupton, Mich.

John Sargent left for London, Ontario, to resume his duties as salesman with a hostelry company after spending a vacation trip of four weeks with his parents, Mr. and Mrs. C. E. Sargent of East Center street.

Mrs. Katherine Zachman entertained a family dinner party at her home on South Park

SYNOPSIS

Nan Forsyth follows Jervis Weare, who, because of his father's death, has just been told that he is to inherit a large fortune. Unless he marries in three days, the fortune will be lost. Nan is determined to help Jervis by the unconfessed love she has felt for him since she was a child. She saved him from drowning. She also is tortured because her sister Cynthia, madly in love, is prevented by poverty from marrying.

CHAPTER FIVE Two Problems Solved

"I WANT to speak to you," Nan said to Jervis.

"Why?"

"I am from Mr. Page's office. It's a business matter."

He paused, detached, not really aware of her.

"You are going home. Will you let me speak to you there?"

He stared for a moment longer. Then he said:

"Oh, certainly."

They went on together. The house rose up before Nan, heavy and square and grey. Jervis used a hatchkey, and they went through the hall into a room at the back of the house—a man's room, littered with a man's belongings, littered also with what were obviously wedding presents. Two windows framed in dark velvet curtains looked out upon a fair-sized garden bordered with trees.

Nan passed into this room and felt its atmosphere close about her. The current had brought her here. She ebbd away from her. She was Nan Forsyth facing something that was going to decide all the rest of her life, and all the rest of Jervis Weare's life. For a moment she felt fear as she had never felt it before. And then courage rose in her like a flood.

He turned from the door and said, "Do you mind saying what

"Anne Forsyth?"

"No—just Nan. I was christened Nan."

He wrote "Nan Forsyth," and without looking up asked her age.

"Twenty-two."

"Parents?"

"Dead."

"Any near relations?"

"A sister." She thought suddenly and warmly of Cynthia, and the dream shook a little.

"Older or younger?"

"Younger." She paused, then added, "Nineteen."

Jervis had stopped writing. His pen dug holes in the paper. He didn't really want to know the answers to any of these questions. She had a well-bred voice. If she was in Page's office, she was likely to be a respectable girl.

"Where are you doing this? For money?"

There was only a moment's hesitation before she said:

"Yes. I'm earning my living. I'm doing it because I have to."

"Yes?" said Jervis.

"If I do this, I shall lose my job, and I've got someone depending on me."

She felt better when she had said that. But Jervis was staring at her.

"Depending?"

"Yes—my sister. I couldn't just take this on and leave her."

He threw himself back in his chair.

"Ten thousand dollars," said Nan and set her teeth.

Jervis Weare regarded her with frank admiration.

"You certainly have a nerve," he said.

"It's because of Cynthia. I can always get a job."

"And she can't?"

Nan shook her head. She looked young, mournful and serious. The contrast between her appearance and what Jervis Weare had just described as her nerve was so extreme as to be ludicrous.

Jervis pushed back his chair and got up.

"All right," he said, "you can have your commission."

To Be Continued.

"Heart of a Wife"

BY ADKLE GARRISON

Shall the Lock Box Be Given Over, as Demanded in the Note Left at the Tea Room, or Shall a Rescue Be Attempted?

FOR a long, tense second after Harry's announcement, there was no sound save that of strained, rapid breathing in the room. Then Ronald sprang to his feet and rushed across the space separating him from Dicky.

"Go on!" he demanded, his young face working convulsively. "How did you know? Did you see them at the window?"

Dicky's eyes were filled with pity as he looked at the frantic boy.

"I'm sorry, son," he said, "but there are limits to a flyer's vision, you know. I saw only something white, like a towel or pillow case, flapping outside a window that looked directly upon a group of large trees above a lake."

"Madge Has a Theory"

The setting was exactly like that described by Marion in her code note to her mother, but of course I could not be sure that the

"So you propose to turn ten thousand dollars over to Cynthia? And how much do you want for yourself?"

"I don't want anything—I can get a job."

"And why should I give Cynthia ten thousand dollars?"

Nan looked up at him with a perfectly steady gaze.

"You won't give it to Cynthia—you'll give it to me. Mr. Weare left you a million dollars. The ten thousand dollars will be my commission."

Jervis Weare walked across the room and back again.

"All right," he said, "you can have your commission."

To Be Continued.

girls really were giving a signal. The white flapping thing may have been something washed and hung out of the window to dry. However, there was a line in the yard with things hanging from it, although I could not tell what they were.

"Could you tell from that height whether the flapping thing you saw at the window was white, like a towel or pillow case, or light colored, like a bit of silk lingerie?" I asked.

Dicky looked at me sharply.

"You've thought of something," he said. "Better spill it. No, I couldn't tell. It might have been any light color. But what's on your mind?"

"The Sparks Fly"

"Nothing of importance, I am afraid," I said. "It just occurred to me that the girls are so resourceful they may have washed their lingerie, and waited to hang the wet things out of the window until they heard the airplane the first time. They had no change of clothing with them, and I cannot imagine either of them accepting any service from even the women of the band that was not forced upon them."

"Right you are, Lady Fair," Harry Underwood said, and again I saw that quick look in Hugh's eyes, flashing first to Harry's face, then to mine. I saw something else, too—that Dicky had seen that questioning look—and I waited tensely for his reaction to it.

"Look hush, Mistah Underwood," Dicky drawled, "ain't it about time you got over that hopeless passion for my wife that you've been cherishing all these years? That 'Lady Fair' business was all right when you were writing sonnets to her eyebrows, but it's a bit archaic now. Had Rosalie, who further more, you are likely to startle the innocent bystanders."

His real answer, the only thing of his which rhymed with the first, meant anything to him, was his final sentence.

But, Harry, as I was at his side, I was not that which brought the quick blood to my cheeks, or the excited, though quickly veiled, look into Harry Underwood's eyes.

Dicky, however, had known of that old infatuation of Harry's, to which I never had given the slightest encouragement, and which even Harry long since had forgotten in his late-flowering but intense love for Lillian.

For a moment I had wondered, as I knew that Harry, whether Dicky had seen more than we guessed in those far-off days. Then I had seen that my husband's only jealousy was that which he held for Hugh Grantland, and the sole reason for his speech was the surprised and resentful look which Hugh had given Harry.

A Fortunate Misgiving

After that first quick glance I did not dare to look at any one of the group in the upper room, but I guessed that Hugh never had made a mightier effort to control his temper than when he listened to Dicky's last gibes, which he knew, of course, was aimed at him.

"If those kidnapers have the intelligence with which we have credited them," my father said quietly, "the girls will have been provided with sufficient changes of clothing so that there would be no need of their doing any washing."

Mary waited only to be sure that my father had finished before protesting.

"Neither Marion nor Carolyn would wear anything those people provided, if they could help themselves," she said vehemently. And I blessed both her and my father for the digression they had afforded.

ed—a purposeful one on my father's part, I was sure.

The Important Problem

"But this is not the main question we have to decide," my father said quickly. "I think we may safely conclude that the girls are in that mountain house so graphically described by Marion, and that they did give the signal. Hugh assures us that everything is ready for the attempt to rescue the girls. Shall we go on with our plans in the

IVORY FOR EVERYTHING NOW!

It is the biggest sensation a soap ever made.

"Ivory Soap prices are lowest in 17 years." Yes—and not just Ivory "specials"—but regular everyday prices at your dealer's.

From the west coast to the east, women are talking about it... and buying Ivory Soap—six, eight, a dozen cakes at a time. Dealers are sending hurried orders... bigger orders... "Ivory Soap selling eight times, ten times as fast as normal," they say.

Why?... Women themselves are giving the answer. "At these new low prices, we can use Ivory for everything," they say. "We've always used Ivory in the bathroom—now we can afford to use it all over the house."

Yes—it is big news. And big value... the greatest value in soap you can buy today... "Ivory Soap—now priced so low you can give Ivory protection to everything!"

Mail Filled with Surprises for Couple as Son Sends Home Pets

Life for Mr. and Mrs. W. W. Woodruff of 684 East Church street is just one big surprise after another and all because their son, Earl F. Woodruff, who manages a furniture store in Tucson, Ariz., likes to hunt and fish, and incidentally pick up a few "unusual pets" along the way.

When the parcel post or expressman stops in front of the Woodruff home the big question is "what is it this time?"

The newest arrival is a Gila monster which at present is basking in the gaze of dozens of pedestrians and motorists who stop to look at him as he lolls in his pen of sand in the window of the Post Cigar store at 684 East Center street. The reptile was caught bare-handed by Mr. Woodruff in Old Mexico, recently. He is about 18 inches long and according to Mr. Woodruff is an unusually large one.

The reptile is a handsome one as Gila monsters go, with his orange and green spotted coat, but in his case it is handsome in a handsome does. He will be treated right as long as he behaves himself and doesn't use his fangs which contain deadly poison. He is something of a lazy chap and displays little interest in anything except his food which consists of a raw egg.

No so long ago, Mr. Woodruff, who is interested in something different in pets, sent his parents two fat spiders of the tarantula variety and last year they received a present of two horned toads. These were accepted and later given homes with persons interested in them but the family thumb went down on the offer of two black diamond rattlers which he said he would send "if they thought they would like to have them."

Children Are Taken To Prison by Mothers; Club Is Organized

By International News Service
SHERBORN, Mass., August—
Mother love—that inestimable quality which has no bounds—has even secured itself behind prison bars.

Counting which permitted Mrs. Bessie Kelly Bergin of South Boston to have her 10-month old baby, "Bunky Boodies," with her in her prison cell at the Massachusetts State House of Correction, a project being carried on at the institution.

In a section apart from other inmates there are 47 mothers who live with their children, all under the years of age.

Known as "mothers' corridor," this group of children—baby girls, boys, white and colored, dark and fair—tomp around and play among under direction of their mothers but oblivious of their prison surroundings.

Prison officials encourage imprisoned mothers to send for their little ones in the belief that they will develop the finer side of their character.

Mrs. Gwendolyn Mason, formerly of Radcliffe college, directs the nursery school, while Dr. Helen Westling in charge of the hospital watches the physical progress of the babies.

The babies on arrival at the institution undergo a three weeks isolation in order to check any possible entrance of contagious diseases. They then go to a bright, cheerful, sunny room—the nursery—where they romp and play about at will. During the night, the child is placed in the care of his or her mother.

The inmates have formed a mothers' club. During meetings problems of babyhood are discussed and opinions passed between them. The institution is under the direction of Dr. Miriam Van Waters, who came from California where she was an associate justice. Since coming east, Dr. Van Waters has placed into action many new ideas of prison reform.
